LIKE MOTIVES.

Frank Verrinder stared moodly at the gilt mouldings on the crilings and sighed. Then he paid his score and drifted out into the human stream in the Strand.

The reason of this alternative ab-straction and isvageness on Mr. Ver-riaders part was simple. He was a journalist; his editor had ordained that two columns of spicy "copy" should be forthcoming, and he had no idea in his head.

head.

But fate was kind to him. Proceeding leisurely homeward by a short cut to his bachelor's abode, he happened to encounter a small news agency. On the window thereof was inscribed, "Office of the Matrimonial Locking Glass. The only reliable medium for the promotion of matrimony among all classes of the United Kingdom."

At the same moment an old gentleman alighted from a hansom a few yards down the street, and, after hovering nervously about the doorway, vanished within.

The old gentleman departed hurriedly as furlitively as he had come. But Frank did not follow his example. It had occuered to aim that material for those two columns lay ready to his hand. The pale shopman came across to him with an ingratiating smile fraught with meaning.

"Fine day, siz, I suppose we can't do anything else for you?"

"I happened to see a copy of the "Matrimonial Locking Glass," and —" But fate was kind to him. Proceed-anything else for you?"

"I happened to see a copy of the 'Matrimonial Looking Glass,' and —'
"Exactly. You want to see the ealter. I thought so. Will you kindly step this way?

A stout, elderly gentleman, in a frock coat, sat at a table, correcting the proofs of next week's issue.
"Good day, sir. Will you take a chair? Do you come for yourself or for a friend?"

Friend?"

"For myself. To tell you the truth," sald Frank, with engaging candor, "I have just bought a share in a Canadian farm, and I want a wife to take out with me. I don't happen to know anybody sultable, so I thought if you could find me a nice, practical young woman, I shouldn't mind if she hada't any money."

"Zo! Den I tink I haf plenty yong

"Zo! Den I tink I haf plenty yong ladles on my books dat would suit you." said the editor, with decision. Thereupon Frank appended a fictitious name to a document whereby he undertook to pay propristors of the "Looking Glass" ten guineas upon his wedding day if he obtained a wife through their agency, and 2% per cent upon any foruthe she might possess. "Haugh! here is just de ting for you. A young lady, aged 2%, brunette and gray eyes, medium height, considered good looking. Is not particular about ze color of ze gentleman's hair, but he must be under 30 and of an affectionate disposition. How vill she suit "York wall" cantal Proping 10.

"Very well," repliet Frank. "I should be glad if you would arrange for an early interview." "I will communicate mit her at vonce, and ask her to make an appointment mit you for to-morrow! Good afternoon!"

ment mit you for to-morrow; Good afternoon!"

"From Miss Adelina Vansittart to Hilary West, per express:

"The brunette with the gray eyes will be at the Natural History Museum. South Kensington (Central Hall), at 3 p. m. precisely, unless she hears to the contrary. Mr. West may know her by the pink rosebud in her left hand."

He discovered her pretending to examine the skeleton whale, and casting furtive glances at the entrance; and his eyes traveled from her face to the flower in her hand, and back again to linger with unfeigned susprise and admiration.

And she looked a lady, too! Aston-miration.

And she looked a lady, too! Astonishment for an instant deprived him of his assurance. But he was a journalist.

He recovered himself and addressed

He recovered himself and addressed her.

"Miss Vansittart, I believe?"

He was immediately aware that she was as surprised at his appearance as he had been at hers.

"Yes; and you, of course, are Mr. West?" she said, and extended a friendly hand.

A little panse ensued. Frank cleared his throat. She was not at all enharrassed; she waited for him to broach the delicate subject they had met to discuss with a perfect repose of manner and calmly expectant eye. Frank broke the loe with a little nervous gasp.

proke the loe with a little hervois gasp.

"Er-I don't know, he began, "what is the custom in these affairs, never having, of course, undergone a similar experience before, and I should be sorry to appear impertinent or to offend you in any way. Perhaps you can suggest how we ought to proceed?"

"I expect," she replied, thoughtfully, "the best way would be to ask each other personal questions. First, of all, are you satisfied with my appearance?"

"Your appearance surpasses my are you satisfied with my appearance:

"Your appearance surpasses my highest expectations, Miss Vansittart," declared Frank, solemnly.
"I am told that you intend to settle in Canada. Have you any experience in farming?"
"I am a Suffolk man, and my father is a landowner," he answered with truth. "Indeed!" said Miss Vansittart; "I shouldn't have thought it. You don't speak or look—like a countryman, And you can give me a reference. Of course, I should wish to be assured that course, I should wish to be assured that you are -er-soler, and honest, and industrious. I mean that you are not already married, of course, and respectable, and-and-" She naused and looked at him. "Now, its, your turn. What are you smilling at?"

"I'm sure. I beg your pardon," said the guilty Mr. Verrinder, "But before we discuss the future any more won't you allow me to get some tea, or some-you allow me to get some tea, or some-thing? I believe there's a refreshment

While she partook of a strawberry tee they dropped "business" and chatted upon a variety of topics. The girl talked well, and showed herself to be witty, intelligent, cultured—as charming in manner as she was in face.

After a few minutes Mr. West arose to one saying:

to go, saying:
"It is much later than I thought, and I wish to be home by 5 o'clock."
"But we have settled nothing, said

"But we have settled nothing, said she.

And added to his perplexity was a regret that deepened as the moments passed. She was mothing to him; she would never be anything to him; and still it planed him, man of the world as he was, to think this girl, so young, so pretty, so attractive in every way, should have stooped to such a mode of obtaining a husband.

"You are very serious, Mr. West. I don't think it is complimentary to me."
"It he the greatest compliment I can pay you," he said, with unexpected gravity.

Big gave him a rather curjous look, "I don't understand you at all " said she."

she. "I hope," said Frank, "you will let me see you again." "Yes, if you wish," she answered. "Shall we say at the same time and place to-morrow?"

Of course, when he had proposed an-other appointment with Miss Adelian Vansittart he had no intention of keep-Vansitiant he had no intention of keeping it.

Presumably he was craving to increase his knowledge of the feminine mind which induced him to contrive that they should meet several times in the next couple of weeks. At Jeast this it what he liked to think.

He learned but little of her history. Her parents were dead and she lived in a small street near the museum with an aunt, who did not know of the step she had taken—the reason, no doubt, why she never oftered to introduce him to her friends; that was all he discovered.

They had met perhaps half a dozer They had met perhaps half a dozen times, when one afternoon she surprised him by demurring to his request for another appointment. Her hestitation was paly swayiners of the same as her went home ashamed to dwell upon the pleasures that "yes" had given him.

He could no longer deceive himself only he had met her in the conventional way!

At last, in a fit of rage at his own weakness, he decided that he would play with fire no longer. By the time he arrived at this Spartan resolve it was the afternoon fixed for the next meeting.

After all, he might just as well give himself another pleasant afternoon at Kensington. He had quite made up his mid that any match between them was impossible, so there would be no danger.

was impossible, so there would danger.
Therefore, it happened that when Miss Vansittart entered the muscum she found him already there. She was looking a little pale to-day, he thought and soon he noticed that her smiles and conversation was rather forced.
"Well. Mr. West, be candle now. What do you think of me?"
He stared at her, amazed.
"What do I think of you," he stammered.

"What do I think of you," he stammered.

"Yes," she said; "you were thinking of me—I can tell by your face. You were wondering, very naturally, how a girl with any decency in her could do such an outrageous thing as I am doing. Don't deny it; I know you were. And, of course, you mean to say good-bye to me when you are tired of your little pastime and amuse the readers of your paper with your matrimonial venture." "The readers! What do you mean? How do you."

"You dropped this old envelope and it heirayed you," she explained. "No, don't apologize; there is no need. But I can't hear that you should keep your bad opinion of me for a moment louger, Mr. — Verrinder, my name isn't Adelina Vansitiart at all, but Evelyn Grey. You see, I write for "Fashion and Frivolity," and the editor—"
"Do you mean to say that you are a journalist, too?" he gasped.
"Yes; it's funny to think that we two scribblers should have been deciving each other, isn't it? But we need not waste any more time."

touch upon her arm.

"Don't go for a moment, please. When did you find out that you were 'wasting you time?" It wasn't to-day, because I had no envelope in my pocket to dron." "No," she answered very faintly; "It

"No." she answered very faintly; "it wasn't to-day."

"Was—was it the first time we met?"
Her face answered for her.
"Then why did you see me any more?"
"I don't know."
But Frank thought he did.
"Yes, you do know." he cried, daringly, "You came because—O, my darling, confess that you like me a little bit!"
Their further conversation need not be recorded. But it may be guessed at from the fact that just two months later "Mr. West" handed a check for 10 guincas to the proprietors of the "Matrimonial Looking Glass."—Answers.

A Quality Most Desired.

Harper's Round Table: Among the qualities most to be desired in a young girl's character is a high sense of honor. I wish I could impress on every reader the need of being always above every-thing petty or small, to that one would not for a single moment ever be tempted to do a mean or underhand thing, to speak unkindly of a friend, or to repeat a conversation which was confidential. It may happen to you, for instance, to be visiting in the home of a relative or friend, where there may be a little friction at the table, or where some anxiety arises about the course of a member of the family. No matter what you see or hear, in such circumstances you are bound, if you are an honorable person, to be silent about it, neither making comments nor looking as if you could tell something if you choose, nor in any may alluding to what is unpleasant, at any future time. A guest in a home cannot be too careful to guard the good name of those under its roof, for it is an honor to be a guest, in the first place, and honor is demanded in return.

for it is an honor to be a gusst, in the first place, and honor is demanded in return.

Again, a nice sense of honor in matters connected with money is very important. Polly is treasurer of a society, and hase the care of the funds. She must sever for an instant, or in an emergency, lend these funds to other people, or borrow them for her own use. I knew a girl-Polly was her name, by the way—who was induced, being treasurer of a certain guild, to lend her brother, for one day, the money she had in her care. The brother was older than Polly, and a very persuasive person. He said: "Why should you hesitate? I'll bring it back to you to-night, and it will oblige me very much if I can take that fifty dollars and pay a bill I owe before noon today." Foolish Polly permitted her scruples to be overruled. The money was not brought back, and but for her father's kindness in making it good she would have been disgraced as a dishonest treasurer. She told me long afterwards that the lesson had been burned in on her mind never to take the title.

What they do in heaven we are ig-norant of; what they do not do we are told expressly, that they neither marry nor are given in marriage.

Speculative conditions underwent a change to-day and a decidedly improved tone prevailed. The withdrawals of gold for export to-merrow fell-short of expectations. To-day's engagements are effect partially by the deposit of $1,000,000 in gold by a city bank in exchange for greenbacks and by the payment of $470,000 by he depository bank, under the cell of the treasury. The action of the treasury department in reducing the premium on assay office gold bars to ½ per cent, excited considerable comment and it was believed that had the reduction been larger the shipments would have been increased. The general market developed strength at the outset under the influence of higher London prices, and moderate purchases for the foreign account. The advancing tendency was stimulated later by covering purchases especially in the internationals. Foreign and local operators appeared to more fully appreciate the great importance of the decision sustaining the legality of the John traffic affectation. Sugar was conspicuous for strength and activity, galuing ½ per cent to 123%. The improvements in the leading railway stocks averaged about a point, with the closing at the beat of the day. The aggregate of business was, however, light.
